

Moses Ben Maimon's Golden Ladder of Philanthropy

The highest level of philanthropy is to prevent poverty by providing a gift, loan or work that allows people to help themselves.

Moses Ben Maimon, a Jewish philosopher advanced a concept of a Golden Ladder of charity which expounded eight degrees of philanthropy, the highest degree being 'helping people to help themselves'.